Selected Comments

- Learning through application.
  "In-class simulations of Congress hearings/discussions, final research project and presentation (which allowed the application and exploration of topics learned in class)..." (U.S. and Globalization)
- Transparent expectations.
  "By no means did I think I would be interested in government, but after taking this course, it sparked a genuine interest in me... I think she set clear expectations about what was expected of her students, and the class was very well organized." (U.S. and Globalization)
- Responsiveness to student feedback.
  "I feel that Professor Jeon adapted based on student feedback to better her course."
  (U.S. and Globalization)
- Individualized feedback on writing.
  "She was very thorough on her notes to my first writing assessment. Her feedback helped me better understand what areas I did well on and what areas needed improvement."
  (Human Rights and World Politics)
- Feedback at scale.
  "Rachel's grading feedback on discussion posts and short writing assignments was specific and tied to the prompts, which was useful in an otherwise asynchronous class... I could apply the feedback before the next assignment." (U.S. Foreign Policy, 1,300+ students)
- Mentorship beyond the course.
  "She went beyond just the course material as well and provided support in other areas like building a career path for Human Rights and exploring areas around that." (Human Rights and World Politics)
